1. The military quarters on August Bebel Strasse, Sassnitz, were occupied by Soviet naval officers and their families, while the former officer houses of the German Navy were used as quarters for naval units. The Victoria Hotel, on Seestrasse, accommodated about 80 soldiers who wore black epaulets with red borders.
2. AA gun positions in the Sassnitz area were located near Lanken, Buddenhagen, Wittenfelde and Prora. A firing range, which, however was not used during the period of observation was seen near Lenzberg. Gun emplacements located above the chalk quarries were guarded by sentries, and soldiers wearing red-bordered black epaulets were observed going to or leaving these positions.
3. The Soviet signal station located above Sassnitz harbor to the northeast of the harbor office, was under reconstruction: A wooden house, surrounded by a stone rampart, was erected on a brick foundation and was being fitted with a large window pane looking toward the sea. A searchlight, about 50 centimeters in diameter, stood on the outer platform, and a signal mast with flag halliards was seen on the platform. The signal station was not very busy.
4. The first wing of the Sailors' Home on Seestrasse was roughly completed, while the roof of the second wing was in the first stage of construction.
5. Beginning in early November 1954, an enormous quantity of bricks was unloaded at Sassnitz railroad station and carried in trucks to Bwasieden.

1,000,000 bricks had been delivered to Dwasieden and that another 2,500,000 bricks would follow for the reconstruction of the former barracks installations. The date of the beginning of the reconstruction operations was not yet disclosed.

6. In November 1954, the surroundings of the Grundbach Valley were barred by garrisoned police and sea police personnel. It was learned [redacted] that all bunkers of the storage tank depot had lost their oil tightness since the spray insulation had proved inadequate. As a result, most of the oil stored there since September was lost by gradually trickling out. The area was barred to permit undisturbed examination of the tank plant by experts and by the State Security Service (SSD), which suspected sabotage. The oil bunkers were scheduled to be opened ^{up} and be fitted with oiltight steel cells.¹

1. [REDACTED] Comment. Beginning in September 1954, oil had been filled in through filling hoses from tank trucks driving into the harbor district. Subsequently, the oil was pumped into the bunkers located in elevated places.
